

UPDATE — Global Smart Commodity Group to present at Illinois Hemp Summit, Launches New Website

CHICAGO, Feb. 17, 2021 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Global Smart Commodity Group ("GSCG") is pleased to announce its participation in the Illinois Department of Agriculture's (IDOA) virtual Hemp Summit on Tuesday, February 23. The free online event will take place from 9am to noon with presentations from growers, processors, university researchers, industry stakeholders and IDOA staff. The Summit's agenda is structured to optimize the distribution of information during the three-hour event. GSCG will present their use of blockchain technology along with smart contracts to ensure quality control and exact specifications for socially conscious and sustainable commodities.

Starting with the emerging hemp industry, GSCG's proprietary Salus platform provides a first-of-its-kind trading experience, seamlessly and securely combining supply chain management technology, price discovery and risk management tools on a single platform available to multiple commodities across the globe.

GSCG has also launched their new website highlighting and providing access for customers and members to its Salus platform. As a socially conscious commodity market platform, the website also showcases several thought leadership pieces as part of its Global Perspectives Series.

"We're very excited to have our user experience up and operational," said Emily Bouroudjian, Chief Content Officer for GSCG. "The new website will be filled with the valuable information which is needed for every end user, member and market participant. Aside from acting as a site for product information, it will be the main gateway into the revolutionary Salus market platform. This is a critical factor, so end users of the site do not have to navigate away while they manage risk."
